Frankfurt, 02 November 2024

www.regionallabourmarketmonitoring.net

Dear colleagues,

we hope you had some good time after our conference in Lugano. We are currently working on the topic for 2025 and will keep you updated soon. In the meantime, please find here some current topics that could be of interest.

ANNUAL MEETING 2024 – LOOKING BACK

We had a time full of wonderful moments, friendly discussions and interesting presentations on Shortages of Labour and Skills: Insights and Evidence to Inform Strategies Relevant to Regional and Local Labour Markets and Labour Market Observatories, meet partners and friends and made new contacts. We explored Lugano and its hidden places and know where to go next time. Thanks to over 90 participants for joining us and your significant contributions during the last days. Sharing your knowledge and thoughts is key for our network and the debate. A warm thank you to our hosts. They managed everything upfront and during the conference to successful days and exchange.

Please find here the link to download the program, where you will find links to the PDFs of all presentations. To access it, click on the programme on the title of the presentation or the speaker's name. This documentation is open for everyone, so please feel free to share this knowledge, with all interested persons.

Our colleague Javier Armaolea Juaristi from Lanbide BASQUE COUNTRY PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT SERVICE has prepared a summary in Spanish, if you wish to share this with other interested persons, that are not fluent in English, please feel free to forward this.

INVITATION FOR THE 2nd EDITION OF THE ETUI MOOC: SKILLS FOR LABOUR AND ENVIRONMENTAL JUSTICE

While climate change is posing unprecedented challenges to existing socio-economic models in Europe and beyond, the crisis of welfare systems based on growth, consumption and redistribution involves an in-depth rethinking of the role of labour law and industrial relations institutions in current and future societies. In contrast to siloed approaches that characterised the 20th-century industrial era, contemporary societal problems such as the consequences of climate change and climate policies on the world of work imply shifting the policy and regulation focus from a linear to a systemic type of intervention in which labour and environmental justice are pursued simultaneously.

This Massive Open Online Course (MOOC) will bring together trade unionists, public opinions leaders, researchers and practitioners in the fields of labour law, industrial relations, and environmental law to discover the synergy between work and nature, the balance of labour and environmental sustainability, the intersection between labour law and environmental law, and much more.

At the end of the course, the participants are expected to develop a deeper understanding of the links between two normative fields of law: labour law and environmental law. More precisely, they will learn how environmental concerns could be reconciled with the ideas of justice in the world of work.

The MOOC teaching faculty includes senior researchers of the ETUI research team, as well as scholars from leading universities worldwide. Video lectures and relevant learning activities will be shared in the dedicated MOOC electronic platform.

The MOOC is scheduled to begin on January 20th, 2025 until March 9th. Participation in the course is free and will primarily consist of asynchronous activities. Being fluent in English is a must.
